FIRST CHURCH BUILT IN LEE.

The first religious meetings in Lee were held in Deacon Oliver West's barn; later in Peter Wilcox barn, which was near John Phelan's present residence, and finally in Lyman Foote's house (the T. L. Foote place.) The church shown herewith was built by the town in 1780, was 50x35 feet, had no chimney, and was located where the park is now and faced Park street. This building was torn down in 1800 and another built on the same site. In 1833 this building was moved back to the site of the present church, and was burned in the fire of 1857. When moved from the southeast corner of the park in 1813 it was enlarged.

HYDE PARK

This gives very clearly the residence of Deacon Alexander Hyde at the time he was editor of the Gleaner, and before the extensive changes were made. Here lived Dr. Hyde, pastor of the first church in Lee, and later Deacon Hyde had a boys' school in the building to which reference is often made at this late day.

FREAK BRIDGE ON NEW ROAD.

This angular structure, built on the Lee & Huntington trolley line, has no parallel in bridge construction in the country. The north line of its east abutment is within four feet of the south line of its west abutment, and it is built at the most acute angle of any bridge known. There are four other arched concrete bridges on the road, two of them costing over $50,000.
